and Surgical Photographs, 3rd edition

Compiled by Michael Rhode and Robert Montgomery, 1989
Revised February 1991, January 1994

A brief note on Surgical Photographs:

There are 400 Surgical Photographs (SP) held at the Otis Historical Archives (OHA) of the National Museum of Health and Medicine. They are also known as Photographic Series especially in contemporary Museum correspondence. Most of these photographs were taken at the Army Medical Museum in the 1860s and 1870s to illustrate interesting surgical operations or difficulties. Some of the photographs were engraved to illustrate cases in the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion (MSHWR). They were also bound in volumes of fifty to make an eight-volume set titled Photographs of Surgical Cases and Specimens. The first volume of 50 photographs was printed in an edition of 40 sets which were distributed to Medical Directors in the Union Army (Lamb: History of the US Army Medical Museum, p.35). By January 1869, the next three volumes containing photographs 51 through 200 along with the first volume were being made available to interested parties, including the College of Physicians of Philadelphia and the Royal College of Surgeons in Dublin, Ireland (Lamb, p. 52). In 1871 the first five volumes were formally published as Photographs of surgical cases and specimens taken at the Army Medical Museum. (Lamb, p. 61). The final three volumes had apparently been published by late 1881 to complete the set. Selections were also bound as Gunshot Fractures of the Femur by George Otis. The photographs were printed at different times from wet collodion glass plate negatives and show a variety of poses and retouchings. Several of the negative plates are still maintained by the OHA. In some photographs with the same number, the pose is varied or completely different, presumably printed from a different negative when the first glass plate was broken. Similarly, on some soldiers, fig leaves have been discretely placed on some of the copies. These variations are referred to as 'B' copies while an arbitrary pose (usually the unretouched or most numerous) was selected as an 'A' copy for our use. The printed volumes do not differentiate between variations. The mounts also vary depending on the time of printing. The most interesting is the Columbian Exposition of 1876 mount. Each mount generally has a short summary of the case on the back, which provides the material contained in this finding aid. Frequently, the material written for MSHWR has been copied exactly on the verso.

This index was originally intended for in-house use, so some of the material it contains may be of little interest to holders of the published set. This new edition hopefully presents the information in a more usable way. The following page contains explanations of the more confusing aspects of the finding aid. Due to the computer software used (PARADOX) we can create specialized cross-reference indices; several of these follow the main index.

Currently, the collection is sorted by photo number, doctor, battle, patient, and regiment. However, if the OHA gets a request for other information on a photograph, we can search using the computer.

Explanation of categories and abbreviations:

Number: This is the unique number assigned to a photograph.

Volume: Which of the original eight volumes the photograph was bound in.

Specimen number: This is the number given a specimen when it was accessioned in the Army Medical Museum. The numbering system is defunct, but it can still be used.

Title: Taken from the information on the back of the photograph.

Name, Rank, Company, Regiment, State and MOS: Taken from the back of the photograph. Generally all refer to Civil War soldiers and state where they were serving when wounded.

MSHWR: When known, the reference in the six volume Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion. Surg. II would be the second Surgical Volume. This has recently been reprinted as the Medical and Surgical History of the Civil War.

Doctor, Battle, Date of Injury and Sex: Taken from information on photo and self-explanatory.

Race: According to information on photograph. B is black, W is white, H is Hispanic, and I is American Indian.

Additional Photographs in Series: Refers to other picture of the same case either in the Surgical Photographs or a different OHA collection. CP is Contributed Photograph, NS is New Series and SCDV is specimen cartes-de-visite Comments: Anything we thought might be useful or interesting.

PHOTOGRAPH NO. 93.—*Recovery after a Penetrating Gunshot Wound

Major H. A. Barnum, 12th New York, was wounded at Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862, by a conoidal musket ball, which entered midway between the umbilicus and the anterior superior spinous process of the left ilium, passed through the middle of the ilium, and emerged posteriorly. The wound was regarded as fatal, and the patient was left in a field hospital. On July 24, he was captured and was taken to Libby Prison, a distance of eighteen miles, in an express wagon. On July 17th, he was taken to Aikin's Landing in an ambulance, a distance of seventeen miles, and exchanged. He was conveyed by water to Albany, and thence by rail to Syracuse, New York. At no time were any symptoms of peritonitis manifested. On October 1st, Major Barnum went to Albany, where Dr. March dilated the anterior wound by an incision, and extracted several fragments of the ilium, and directed that a tent should be worn. Promoted to the command of the 149th New York, Colonel Barnum took the field in January, 1863. He wore the tent about a month, when the anterior wound healed. About the middle of March, a large abscess formed and evacuated itself at the site of the anterior wound. In April, Dr. March again cut down to the ilium, and introduced a tent. No loose fragments of bone were found. The Colonel resumed his duties, and commanded his regiment at Gettysburg. In January, 1864, another large abscess formed and discharged posteriorly. The orifice was enlarged by Dr. L. D. Sayre of New York, and a seton of oakum was passed from before backwards through the entire track of the ball. This was worn for several weeks, when Surgeon M. K. Hogan, U. S. V., substituted a seton of candle-wick, which was gradually reduced in size, and finally replaced by a single linen thread. The photograph was taken at the Army Medical Museum in August, 1865. The wound still discharged slightly, and the thread seton was still worn. Promoted to be a brigade commander, General Barnum had been almost continually in the field for the past two years. He participated in the campaigns of Atlanta, Georgia, and Carolina, was shot through the right forearm at Kenesaw Mountain, and received a shell wound of the side at Peach Tree Creek. The further history of this case is given in the Second Surgical Volume of the Medical and Surgical History of the Rebellion, p. 213, Case 619.

Photographed at the Army Medical Museum.
